The PMBOK rules have been violated!

Sorry, the page you are looking for does not exist. This is a serious threat to your project and, as the PM, it is up to you to refer to your quality management plan, determine the proper QA investigative steps and traceback through the processes to determine where the disconnect occured and what corrective actions will be required to recover this project as well as add the data to any OPA's or future projects.

On the other hand, you could be an empowered PM and push back. No, seriously, push the back button - it's probably just a typo or something...
